Wells Hoves In Sight.

In the middle of it, while waiting for Salt Lake county to cast its vote, Governor Wells was dragged in by the committee that had been sent out for him. The executive was overcome, either by emotion or by the pleasure of being introduced by his friend, Senator Brown. He recovered himself in time, however, to make a pretty little speech of thanks.

"Mr. President and gentlemen of the convention," said he, "it has been justifive years since you nominated me for governor and I desire to say that the occasion of this second nomination is the proudest moment of my life. Five years ago, when the Republican party called me irro the public service I deemed it the greatest honor that had ever been thrust upon me. I think the same thing tonight.

"I am provid to be on the same ballot with McKinley is re-elected—and I believe he will be we have the assurance that the solendor of this government will be perpetuated and maintained. It will also be extended to the downtroden people of the West Indees and the Philippines."

In conclusion Governor Wells made the expected attack on Bryan and convention, and can be provided to the same ballot with the specific of the west lindes and the Philippines."

Chairman Brown had hardly uttered "state treasurer" before Alma Eldredge of Summit was on his feet. In the name of Summit he demanded the office of treasurer, and in naming William M. Armstrong of Park City for the place, the one-time candidate for congress worked himself up to a very dramatic pitch. Professor George H. Brimhall of Provo asked for the nomination of one of Provo's sons, John D. Dixon, "whose ability has been proven by the many offices he has held in the Republican party."

From the yells it was apparent that Dixon had a walk over. George L. Nye made his first appearance on the floor in seconding Armstrong, saying the party could not afford to loose Summit by turning him down. J. M. Enjoyed the Mess.

There was no relaxation either until the cleaning-up process was completed, and it was 3 o'clock before the mess call was sounded. Many of the boys had left the city without their breakfast, and that first meal on the camp ground is one they will long remember. They left the mess tent loud in their praises of the commissary department.

Drill was omitted during the day, and the first maneuvers began with "retreat parade," which was called at 5:45 p. m.

General Cannon did not remain at the camp long after giving orders for the day, but returned to the city to say adieu to his father, who left yesterday en route to Europe.

A feature of the day was the flagraising ceremony, which was very impressive. The trumpteter of the guard, Walter Pike, sounded to colors, and while the men stood around the tall flag nole with bared heads, "Old Glory"

There is encamped two pattalions, composed of seven companies of the First regiment of the Utah National Guard. The site is the same as occupied last year, when it was known as Camp Wasatch, but an order promulgated yesterday by Brigadier General John Q. Cannon will change the name of the camp this year to Camp Liscum. Following is the order:

"The camp of instruction of the First brigade, National Guard of Utah, established at Fort Douglas, Salt Lake City, pursuant to general orders No. It, adjutant general's office, and general orders No. 5, these neadquarters shall be known as Camo Liscum, in honor of Colonel Emerson H. Liscum of the Ninth United States infantry, a brave and noble officer, who recently laid down his life at his country's call and to whom these premises were well known."

This company was organized only about a month ago, and is made up principally of office clerks in the city, and when they beheld the temporary ruin of their patent leather or neatly polished foot gear plastered with grimp slush 2 rewere many wry faces and expressions of disgust among them.

The grounds were reached about 10 o'clock, and the tents having been pitched the day before by a detail of sixteen men in command of Lieutenant Webb, the soldiers were set to work putting the camp in order. There work putting the camp in order. There being an abundant growth of weeds on the field the work of "straightening up" meant the total clearing away of all this class of vegetation, so in a short time shovels, hoes and rakes were being lustily wellded on every part of the camp ground.

Here again the tenderly nurtured members of Company G came in for a liberal amount of jollying, especially from the rural contingent, who were
